Introduction

Whatever you most want from life?

That sounds like a pretty big claim... but whatever your big dream, your passionate desire, the goal or the achievement that means the difference between a mere existence and a true, fulfilling, satisfying, happy life, it's unlikely to be much bigger, or more difficult to reach, or more apparently impossible than those of the people whose advice and thoughts are listed in this book for your encouragement and inspiration.

- At nineteen months old, Helen Keller contracted an illness that left her deaf and blind... but she learned to speak, and to read (in Braille) English, French, German, Greek and Latin, and became the first blind person to graduate from college in the USA (magna cum laude, from Radcliffe).

She developed into a world-famous writer, speaker and political activist, meeting every US President from Grover Cleveland to Lyndon Johnson, and was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1964.

Is your dream more “impossible” than that?

- Abraham Lincoln was born into a poor, uneducated farming family. His father made good money through investments – and lost the lot through litigation. His mother died when he was nine. He had no more than 18 months of formal education, but loved reading and taught himself the law so well that he became a barrister.

His first fiancée died before the wedding could take place. When he did marry, he and his wife had four sons – but three of them died in childhood. He was elected to the House of Representatives, where he was far from a success, then he stood for election to the Senate, and was beaten.

It must have seemed as if he'd gone as far as he was ever going to go – but in 1860, he became the President of the United States... and he abolished slavery.

Is what you long for much more difficult than that?

- Thomas Edison tried 10,000 (yes, that's right – ten thousand!) times to make a light-bulb before he found a way that worked... and went on to hold more patents for his inventions than anyone before - or, so far, since.

He also made discoveries that launched recorded music and the movie industry... and yet he had no more than three months' formal education.

Wherever you might have to start from, and whatever failures and frustrations you've endured so far, can you honestly say they're worse than Thomas Edison's?

- If you think such things can't happen now, just look at Oprah Winfrey.

Her parents were unmarried teens, and till she was 6 she lived in poverty with her grandmother, who beat her when she misbehaved.

Reclaimed by her mother, she was abused from the age of 9 by her uncle, a cousin and a family friend. She ran away from home, lived on the street, became pregnant at 14, and gave birth to a son, who died soon after.

She was then sent to live with her father, who encouraged her to concentrate on education, and at 18 she won a scholarship to Tennessee State University, when she studied communication.

Taking over an unimpressive half-hour TV talk show in Chicago, she quickly took its ratings from last to first place. Renamed The Oprah Winfrey Show, its time slot was doubled to an hour, and it went nationwide. Its ongoing success has led to her being called the most influential woman in the world... and even that's not all.

Oprah is also an Academy Award-nominated movie actress as well as a successful writer, magazine publisher and book critic, and she runs a TV production company. She's believed to be the richest African American of the 20th Century, and, for three years running, the world's only African American billionaire.

Her Angel Network charity encourages people around the world to help to make a difference in the lives of others. She's been described as the most philanthropic African American of all time, and her charitable works include a $10 million contribution to help the victims of Hurricane Katrina, and spending $7 million putting 100 African Americans through college, not to mention hosting a TV show from her own home that in one evening raised over $7 million for children in Africa.

Is all this at the expense of her personal life, then? Not at all.

After several turbulent relationships, one of which involved her for a time in taking drugs, Oprah and her partner, Stedman Graham, have been together more than 20 years, and have seven lovely homes and two dogs. Although they don't have children of their own, Oprah describes the hundreds of students at the Academy she has set up in South Africa as her daughters.

Whatever in your life and background you may feel has held you back, and made you feel can't achieve or don't deserve success, can it really be much worse than everything that Oprah's been through?

Are your own dreams really much more out of reach than hers? It's very difficult to picture how they could be!

As well as overcoming some appalling obstacles to achieve success that those around them must have thought was totally impossible, these four people have something else in common, too.

They, like all the other people in this book, have offered their advice and their encouragement to all who want to follow in their footsteps.

Writers and rock stars, pacifists and generals, spiritual leaders and giants of industry, engineers and inventors, poets, politicians, scientists and sporting legends... to read their words is to hang out with them, and use the things they've learned to help you to achieve your dreams and your desires, whatever they may be.

Forget the difficulties, and refocus your attention on exactly where you want to go. Start your day with some encouragement and inspiration from the people who know exactly what working for the things you want most is about.

Whether you're aware of it or not, you absorb a lot of the opinions and the attitudes of those around you, so make sure that those opinions and those attitudes are good, constructive, positive, empowering ones by spending a few minutes with some of the most successful people who have ever walked this planet, every day.

There's a quotation here for each day of the year, so it only takes a few moments to check out some encouragement.

Of course, if you want to, you can read as many extra as you like – but reading a small amount each day will reinforce your increasing feelings of commitment and self-confidence much more than simply reading the whole thing once, and then forgetting all about it.

It's in the constant repetition of these attitudes of positivity and inspiration that the book's real power lies (and to learn the easiest and fastest way to change your own attitude to one of unquenchable optimism and dynamic energy, visit <http://www.Supreme-Success.com>).

The people quoted in this book have all used the power of their mental attitude to help them overcome all kinds of failure and frustrations, and they've succeeded – often way beyond their wildest dreams... and so can you.

You can start right here...
